OVERVIEW

Athletic training is one of the most rapidly expanding fields of modern allied healthcare. Certified athletic trainers are skilled in the prevention, evaluation, treatment, and rehabilitation of injuries incurred by athletes and other persons engaged in physical activity. They function as important members of a healthcare team in a variety of settings including high schools, colleges and universities, professional sports teams, and other athletic healthcare facilities.

The mission of the Lewis Athletic Training Education Program is to educate undergraduate students in the allied healthcare profession of athletic training. Students gain a thorough understanding of anatomy, physiology, nutrition, and biomechanics. This knowledge is applied in a hands-on clinical experience in an athletic training setting, either at Lewis University or off-site. Clinical experiences coincide with a student’s ultimate professional goals, and teach them principles of the legal, ethical, and administrative issues that relate to athletic training.

Successful completion of this degree program allows students to sit for the certifying exam administered by the Board of Certification.

ACCREDITATION

The Athletic Training Education Program is accredited by CAATE (Commission on Accreditation of Athletic Training Education). It is designed to prepare students for the following types of employment settings: physical therapy clinics, educational environments, fitness centers and professional sport franchises.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Lewis University’s Athletic Training degree program offers diverse clinical assignments in various areas, including collegiate and high school environments, physician offices, and physical therapy clinics.
- Low student-to-instructor ratios both in the classroom and in clinical settings, provide individualized attention.
- This flexible program focuses on accommodating student athletes and student career goals.
- The Department of Sport and Exercise Science offers a major and minor in Sport Management, a program area that fully complements the Athletic Training major. Minors also are available in Fitness Management and Athletic Coaching.
